'BURGUNDY' DESERT WILLOW

Burgundy blooms with virtually no seed pods. Adaptable and fast growing with no thorns and virtually no seed pods. Not a true willow, but the numerous narrow, shiny green leaves provide a willow-like appearance on these upright growing deciduous trees. These riparian trees are drought tolerant once mature, but moderate to ample water initially helps them to become well-rooted and permanently established. They will go winter dormant, losing their leaves for a short time, before leafing out and resuming their persistent spring and summer flowering. They deserve wider consideration and use in low desert landscapes due to their reliability and ease of care & culture.
