

Pandorea jasminoides

BOWER VINE

Lush looking green vine with reliable pink flowers. These evergreen, fast growing vines are best with some support as it will not cling to surfaces, but it twines and rambles up trellises, lattice, arbors, obelisks, or poles with wires with little training needed. The vines have compound glossy dark green leaves that cover woody to herbaceous stems. In spring, they flower with attractive clusters of white to light pink tubular blooms with distinctive dark pink throats. Short pea-like pods can follow the flowers, which are easy to remove as needed. Otherwise periodic trimming or pruning for training and size is all they require. Bower vine can tolerate heat and full sun even in low desert landscapes but they are not considered xeric or very drought tolerant. They will perform best with regular supplemental irrigation and moist roots during the growing season.
