TROPICAL BIRD OF PARADISE

Bird-like blooms above tropical foliage. Succulent stems and paddle-shaped leaves grow from a trunkless base to form evergreen vase-shaped accent plants. Plants are moderate to slow growing but long-lived. They bloom mostly in winter to spring in low deserts, but they can produce blooms periodically throughout the year. Orange flowers with some blue and white accents look like tropical birds or bird beaks that rise on round green stalks above the foliage. Plants perform best with morning sun and afternoon shade with ample supplemental water during summers. They do require protection from frosts. These tropical plants work well around pools and patios in-ground or in large containers. Plant them with other tropical looking plants like Hibiscus, Palms, Canna lily or Tecoma sp.
