AUTUMN SAGE RED, PINK, WHITE

Durable, low, bright flowered shrubs. Autumn sage blooms best during the later part of the year, presenting a symphony of color. Woody, small growing shrubs have bright to dark green round leaves that make the plant look soft and herbaceous. Flowers are borne on spires above the foliage. Many different cultivars, including magenta pink, red, white, coral, and purple. (Although purple flowered types are most often a different species) Although native to Texas and Mexico, they're happier with filtered light or dappled shade. In low deserts, they can tolerate full sun exposure but must be watered well if fully exposed, especially in summer. Branches are brittle, so be gentle planting and doing light pruning in late winter to early spring.
