Aloe 'Rooikappie'

LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD ALOE

Cynthia Giddy, a renowned South African horticulturist, created this charming hybrid in 1974. The result is a smaller, clumping aloe that will fill small spaces nicely. Because of its diminutive size, she gave it the name “Little Red Cap,” which is Afrikaans for “Little Red Riding Hood.” Enchanting yellow-orange flowers will bloom nearly year round on top of densely-clustered rosettes of succulent leaves, which arch outward then down at tips. The leaves will vary in color from a deep green to maroon and are neatly spotted. Along the edges are small teeth. Create your own fairy tale with ‘Rooikappie’ planted amidst contrasting perennials or filling colorful ceramic planters around a pool or patio. Like other aloes, its extremely drought tolerant and the flowers will attract pollinators like birds and butterflies to your garden.
